Research shows that early identification and treatment of social emotional concerns promotes positive child development.* Mental health screening is the first step.

*Harvard University’s Center on the Developing Child